Etna Spews Worst Eruption in Decade

RANDAZZO, Sicily - Mount Eina released a fiery stream of molten lava down its slopes Wednesday in the volcano's most destructive eruption in a decade, burning farmlands and threatening to engulf entire villages.

Authorities prepared for possible evacuations but no one was reported injured by the deadly flow from the 10,700-foot mountain, Europe's tallest and most active volcano.

Scientists at the nearby Catania International Institute of Volcanology said some of the lava was flowing as fast as 328 feet an hour. The Italian Army moved soldiers and equipment into the

The lava was reported pouring from a 2,296foot-wide crack that began opening high on Etna's northern flank late Monday night. By Wednesday, the lava had reached more than five miles down the mountain's slopes, destroying apple and nut orebards and farm buildings and threatening the villages of Monte La Guardia and Randazzo.

The police briefly evacuated Monte La Guardia's 250 inhabitants during the night but allowed them to return to their homes Wednesday morning when the lava flows narrowly bypassed the

Officials described the eruption as Ema's most serious since 1971 when the volcano blasted rock and lava from its craters intermittently for 60 days and caused millions of dollars in damage to roads, bridges and farm buildings.

Although an estimated I million people bave been killed by Etna's eruptions during the volcano's 2,400 years of recorded history, the only deaths this century occurred Sept. 13, 1979, when a surprise eruption in one of its craters killed 9 tourists and injured 23 others.

South Africa's Air Force Attacks Camp Of Namibian Guerrillas Deep in Angola

Hopkmeton Post Service 200 miles into Angola and at-tacked a guerrilla training camp of the South-West Africa Peoples' Organization, according to a state-ment Wednesday from military authorities in Pretoria.

In a separate action, at least one South African soldier was killed during a six-bour clash Tuesday between South African and Mozambican forces on their common border, official statements from the two countries said.

South African authorities called the incident an ambush and warned that it would heighten tension between the two countries. Tension has been high since South African forces raided offices of an anti-South African guerrilla move-ment in Mozambique's capital, Maputo, on Jan. 30.

The South African raid into Angola on Tuesday was the first mafor admitted raid on SWAPO bases there since the Westernsponsored peace talks on South-West Africa (Namibia) between SWAPO and South Africa in Geneva in January broke down withconsidered illegal by the United Nations.

African defense ehief Constand Viljoen gave scant deums of the raid on the SWAPO facility, described as a military training base just west of the town of Lubango, The attack was carried out only

"after repeated warnings to Angola" about the guerrilla presence on its territory, Mr. Viljoen said. Another military official said the raid took place about 1:30 p.m. Tuesday and that all South African aircraft returned safely to

There were contrasting versions from South Africa and Mozambique about what bappened between their forces.

The Mozambique news agency, AIM. said two white South African soldiers were killed during a six-hour gun battle inside Mozambique near Ponto do Oro after about 50 South African soldiers, Africa, whose presence there is with about 150 men and two assault cars. AlM said. The body of one white soldier was taken to Maouto while another was recovered by the South Africans, it reported. The South African military command confirmed the death of one soldier. It said he and some colleagues had inadvertently crossed into Mozambique on a beach where there is no border marking. "The alarming aspect of this incident is that the young men were led into an ambush and attacked without warning," the South African statement said. "If it is the atultude of neighboring countries to attack South African soldiers who unsuspectingly and innocently wander across the border, they are heading for a serious crisis and such deeds will inevitably be viewed as deeds of open hostility," Mr. Viljoen said.

"The present development will without a doubt heighten tension on the border. That country and its undisciplined military commanders who caused this incident will have to accept responsibility for this." Mr. Viljoen said.

War Exercises: Start in Bloc

Unrest Grows in Poland With New Strike Threats

WARSAW - Joint Warsaw Pact staff and command exercises were reported under way in Poland and in neighboring Soviet bloc countries Wednesday as the government faced a new national campaign by farmers seeking an independent trade union.
In Washington, U.S. State Department spokesman William J. Dyess

said Tuesday that official U.S. concern about the maneuvers had eased after the administration received word from the Russians last weekend that the exercises will not involve large-scale troop movement.

Meanwhile, timber workers in southern Poland threatened a warning strike for Friday. Workers at 23 lumber mills in Opole, southwest of Warsaw, proclaimed a strike alert just hours after the gov-ernment defused a protest in Ra-

Official Polish media announced that the Soyuz-Ef (Alliance-El) army and navy exercises had begun but gave no details. The maneuvers had been expected to begin in the second half of March in Poland, the Soviet Union, East Germany and Czechoslovakia.

The Communist Party daily Trybuna Ludu said that party leader Stanislaw Kania, Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski, who beads the Polisb Army and is defense minister, and Polish generals met top Warsaw Pact commanders Tuesday, but it did not say where.

According to State Department sources, acting U.S. Ambassador Jack Matlock Jr. was informed last weekend in Moscow that the maneuvers will not involve sufficient troop movements to warrant reporting under the Helsinki accord. The pact requires advance nouce of military maneuvers in Europe involving more than 25,000 troops in one area.

Mr. Dyess left the clear impression that Moscow's message was responsible in part for lessened U.S. concern about possible Soviet intervention. "We are resuing somewhat easier today than last The conference was aimed at ending the 15-year-old which SWAPO is seeking to wrest control of the territory from South maneuvers had also reduced U.S. apprehension.

U.S. Weighs Peace Force

From Agency Dispatches
WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. confirmed Wednesday that the United States is involved in talks with fsrael and Egypt that could lead to the stationing of U.S. troops in the Sinai Desert as part of a peace-keeping force. He also justified a security-oriented foreign aid pro-gram as necessary to counter worldwide Soviet interventionism and international terrorism.

For Sinai

Mr. Haig's comments in testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee followed re-ports that more than 1,000 U.S. soldiers may be dispatched to form the bulk of a force to maintain a buffer between the Israeli and Egyptian armies.

We are now in the process of negotiating or conducting discussions with the parties — with Israel and with Egypt — with respect to what kind of a peacekeeping force would be applied," Mr. Haig said under questioning by the House

He told the committee that "if we hope to see the [Camp David] peace process conunue, as we do .. it may indeed require some American participation in that peacekeeping force."

Security for Israel

Mr. Haig added: "I would doubt seriously that Israel would ever withdraw from the Sinal without a peacekeeping force with which they can take some security and comfort."

Defending the foreign aid program, he warned the committee that if the United States does not move today to stop the spread of what be regards as Soviet-spon-sored terrorism, "we will find it within our own borders tomor-

But again, courtesy had to be defined. By decorum and courtesy, we mean suiting word

The problem is that the brutalization of spirit that occurred during the Cultural Revolution is not easily forgotten by either victims or victimizers. Because the only officially sanctioned definition of beauty was zealous work in upholding the party line and spirit, Red Guards and party workers often found bizarre ways to demonstrate their "redness." Dublin Youth Face Grim Future

Shortage of Jobs Leaves Them Bored, Frustrated

By Ann Gerard-Flynn

DUBLIN — On most weekdays and especially on weekends, the Late Night Village candy store on Malahide Road here is packed with young people. Most are high school age, some are dropouts and many are unemployed graduates.

From midafternoon until the shop closes after midnight, they joke with each other, feed money into two electronic game machines that they got together to buy, smoke and, if somebody has the money, visit the chip shop next door for fried po-

When a nearby pub closes at 11 p.m., they are occasionally witnesses to street fights. Maria Quinn said she watched two drunken teen-agers jump on a third and beat him with sticks.

"Blood was streaming out of the fellow," Miss Quinn said. "They took him into the house behind the chipper, but by the time they called the ambu-lance he was dead."

'Tide of Alarm'

Socializing on the street, drinking before they reach the legal age of 18 and frustration at not being able to find jobs are common among teenagers here. Ireland has one of the youngest populations in Europe, with 30 percent of its labor

There is a rising tide of alarm among parents at the absence of recreational and social facilities for their children," said John Horgan, a Labor Party spokesman who asked in the Irish parlia-ment recently that more money be spent on job programs for the young.

Mr. Horgan estimated that about half of the country's 18-year-olds do not continue their edncation beyond high school. He says there are about 150,000 children who are members of families where the sole form of income is welfare payments, and there is pressure on many youngsters to leave school at the legal age of 15.

With one of the highest unemployment rates in Europe, the prospects are grim for many entering the job market. It was estimated last year that one of four of those unemployed was between the ages of 16 and 24. Mr. Horgan is also concerned about the lack of social workers available to teen-agers. "In terms of expenditure," he said, "there is one teacher per 19 youngsters who continue their education beyond the secondary level but only one social worker for 200 teen-agers. It seems to be assumed that once you are outside the educational structure your social and other needs are not matters to be concerned about."

North Side

The Late Night Village sweet shop is on the north side of Dublin in an area that illustrates many of the situations facing young people, par-ticularly those from working-class backgrounds. Ultan Courtney, 23 years old, grew up in the district and does volunteer work there. He could recall only one person in the neighborhood who went to college. Many, including Mr. Courtney, become hus conductors or delivery drivers. Many become bus conductors or delivery drivers. Many of the young women take jobs as cashiers or typists. He estimates that about 80 percent of the young people in the area have to work to help support their families.

Some of those lucky enough to have jobs find themselves exploited, particularly in nonunion po-sitions. Ireland has no minimum-wage law. Carol O'Reilly, 23, says she earns about $80 for a 35hour week as a waitress with no compensation for night or weekend work. Patrick Doran, 17, has worked intermittently delivering bread since he was expelled from school two years ago. At the time of his expulsion, he said his friends thought, "I was well up, a white big man," although be now wishes he had finished his high school exams. He spends much of his time at the sweet shop.

"I go down there every day," he said. "It's the office. There's nothing much else to do but hang out on the streets."

Ariane Gets Space Test Late in June

Modifications Made In West Europe Craft By Axel Krause

PARIS — The third test launching of Ariane, Western Europe's newest spacecraft, is scheduled to take place at the French space centake place at the French space center near Kourou, French Guiana, during the second half of June, officials of the European Space Agency said Wednesday.

Originally scheduled for this month, the launching was postponed last December because technicians.

nicians were unable determine what caused the engine failure in the previous launching, May 23. The first test launching, on Dec.

24, 1979, was successful. Since the failure of the second, engine tests and modifications have been going on at a testing center in Vernon Injectors for five of Ariane's engines — believed to have been the cause of the difficulties that caused

Assuming the third launching is successful, the craft will orbit a second flight model of a European meteorological satellite, an Indian communications satellite and a European Space Agency capsule conining electronic equipment and environmental sensors.

Progress toward the new launching was said to have removed earlier doubts regarding ESA's ability to solve the previous failure. Those doubts, expressed last December, suggested basic structural prob-lems connected with the Ariane engine system, requiring much new development effort and more fi-

Protest Awaits Reply

Meanwhile, ESA officials said Wednesday that they were still waiting for a reply from the State Department in Washington to a protest about the Reagan administration's shelving of U.S. participation in a space project with Euro-pean nations. The protest was made March 4 by the ambassadors of Italy, Sweden and Switzerland on behalf of ESA's 11 member governments,

The project, which had been scheduled for 1985, called for U.S. and European spaceships to fly over the north and south poles of the sun, and is one of several between the U.S. and European space agencies. The U.S. cuts were ordered as part of a reduction in the budget of the National Aero-

JERUSALEM — If Israel's Labor Party wins the June 30 election, it will attempt to bring Jor-dan, Saudi Arabia and moderate Palestinians into the Middle East peace talks, possibly by offering symbolic concessions concerning Jerusalem, according to a party

The source, who asked not to be identified, said Tuesday that the Israel-Egypt negotiations over Palestinian autonomy appear to have reached a dead end because most Palestinians do not accept Cairo as their representative.

"For the process to be effective, it must be enlarged," the source said. "You don't enlarge the process by giving unilateral concessions to Egypt,"

He said that a labor record.

He said that a Labor govern-ment under party leader Shimon Peres would be willing to resume the talks with Egypt but that those negotiations would not be the primary focus of Israeli diplomacy.

Give Up Control

Public opinion polls show that Labor holds a substantial lead over Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Likud bloc, although the gap bas narrowed in the last two months

Mr. Peres has indicated that be would be willing to give up Israeli control of part — but not all — of the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip, areas taken over by Israel in the The party source explained bow a Peres government would proceed in attempting "mobilize the anti-radical forces in the Middle East to solve the Palestinian problem."

That would require talks between Israel, Egypt, Jordan, Saudi Arabia and any Palestinians pre-pared to recognize Israel's right to exist. The source said that Israel would not negotiate with the Pales-tine Liberation Organization but tine Liberation Organization but would be willing to talk to PLO members who renounce the organization's demand for the ultimate destruction of Israel.

The source conceded that i would be difficult to arrange such talks. Saudi Arabia, Jordan and most Palestinian groups oppose the Camp David peace formula. President Anwar Sadat of Egypt has said be is against bringing King Hussein of Jordan into the process at this time.

But the source said Labor would be prepared to make some gestures toward meeting the concerns of Jordan and Saudi Arabia in an effort to get the talks started. He predicted that Mr. Sadat would not yeto Jordanian entry.

Unlike the Begin government, the source said, Labor would be willing to bring the status of Jerusalem into these discussions.

"Our position is Jerusalem should not be split but at the same time we are willing to discuss any pro-posals that the Arabs might bring," he said. "We are willing to talk about anything, including

The source said a Labor government might make some symbolic changes in Jerusalem, such as authorizing the display of Arab flags in the city or establishing some sort of extraterritorial status for Moslem and Christian holy places.

He said, bowever, that Labor. would resist dividing the city as be-fore the 1967 war. "Terusalem does not become more holy if you have barbed wire running through it,"

One purpose of the new initia-tive, the source said, was to loosen the bold of the PLO on the Arab population of the West Bank, He predicted that many West Bank ci-vilians would support a viable al-ternative to the PLO should one Another objective would be to isolate the radical Arab states of Libya, Syria and Iraq. The source said be understands that the Reagan administration in Washington supports both goals.

The drills were coordinated with ground forces, radar stations, artillery and missile bases, the communique said. It added that combat conditions were being simulated as closely as possible. closely as possible.

ST. LOUIS — Paul "Daffy" Dean, 66, brother of Dizzy Dean and a pitcher for the Gashouse Gang of the St. Louis Cardinals in the 1930s, died Tuesday of a heart attack at Springdale, Ark.

The right-hander never liked the nickname 'Daffy,' given him by an sportswriter after the 1934 season, when he teamed with his more famous older brother to win 49 games and take all four of St. Lou-is' victories in that year's sevengame World Series against the De-

Dizzy Dean had 150 of those, with 30 in 1934. Dizzy Dean, who sometimes said his first name was Jerome and at other times said it was Jay, died in 1974.

Paul Dean won 19 games each year in 1934 and 1935, but a shoulder injury ended his playing ca-reer. The onetime farm boy from Lucas, Ark., spent several years as a minor league owner and manager and as a college baseball coach. He retired 16 years ago.

Mr. Frisch once recalled that Paul Dean threw the "heaviest sinker you ever saw. When a batter hit one of those pitches, his hands stung as painfully in July as if he'd swung an icicle in December."

On Dealing With Third World

R.T. McNamar, U.S. deputy Treasury secretary, told a House Banking subcommittee last week that the Reagan administration wanted to know whether international lending institutions like the World Bank were as close "to the despots of the left" as they seemto be when dealing with "despots of the right." He was making a point that is characteristic of the Reagan administration's emerging attitude toward the Third World: There are acceptable dictatorships and unacceptable ones. The acceptable dictatorships such as Chun Doo Hwan's in South Korea, Augusto Pinochet's in Chile and that of Roberto Viola, who is about to take over in Argentina, are avidly anti-Communist. The unacceptable ones, such as perhaps Samora Machel's in Mozambique or that of the junta now running Nicaragua, not only lack anti-Communist zeal, but could be fairly labeled well on the Soviet side of nonaligned.

The underlying premise of the Reagan approach is that helping anti-Communist despots will strengthen worldwide resistance to the Soviet Union and therefore be in the interest of the United States and the Western alliance. Withholding aid from leftist regimes, similarly, will weaken Communism around the globe and thereby serve U.S. and Western interests.

The new administration's goals are admirable. But its means are simplistic. Contradictions abound in the tangled skein of international relations and a dictator's policy is bardly the only force at play. The fall of the shah of Iran, the putative guardian of the Gulf, should provide an adequate example of that. Or national interests may conflict with Western interests, as in Argentina's sale of wheat to the Soviet Union, which badly undermined the Western embargo imposed after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

But the fundamental flaw in the developing Reagan policy is insufficient understanding of the extent to which United States support for repressive regimes prepares the ground for Soviet infiltration of anti-government popular movements, many of which may eventually triumph. There is no less-beloved nation in the world today than the Soviet Union. No country and no liberation movement wants to encourage Soviet involvement if they can avoid it. Therefore a sensible U.S. policy in the Third World would build on that anti-Soviet feeling rather than drive popular forces into Soviet arms. The view of U.S. representative at the United Nations Jeane Kirkpatrick that left-wing dictatorships tend to be more repressive than right-wing dictatorships may be correct, but the goal is not to favor any kind of dictatorship. It is to foster the development of democratic governments that are more likely to share Western values and objectives.

President Reagan's belated acceptance of an invitation to participate in a North-South summit meeting now planned for October in Mexico City will hardly take the sting out of a policy based on a Western notion of white hats and black hats. There may be times when shoring up a dictator has to take precedence over buman rights considerations in the overall scheme of things. Jimmy Carter learned that the hard way. But the Reagan administration is bound to grasp sooner or. later that Third World governments are often fragile things that come and go. The people, however, are there to stay.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE.

Why, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has been asking his military advisers, does the mobile MX missile have to be part of a "shell game"? Why must it be based in concrete shelters in Utah and Nevada, tearing up the countryside and fomenting wide public resistance? Why not base it at sea, perhaps aboard small submarines in deep ocean, a few hundred miles off the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts?

The new secretary says he has found Pentagon minds all made up: the present "shell game" plan with 200 missiles shuttling among 4,600 shelters is the best answer to the vulnerability of silo-based ICBMs. But to his credit, Mr. Weinberger bas settled for that answer. He has now put his questions to a panel of outside defense experts, to report to him in June.

There are two fat objections to the MX plan favored by the military. It did not foresee the surge of public opposition in the Western states. Environmental lawyers could tie things up in court for years. In the background, there is "an element of the unreal." as Mr. Weinberger has noted, in building so complex a system, of almost Rube Goldberg dimensions and costing $34 billion, to conceal such a small number of missiles. Is there no other way? Yes: Put the MX on submarines, which will provide automatic concealment in two million square miles of ocean.

Then why hasn't the Pentagon gone in that direction already? Because existing submarine-launched missiles are not as accurate as land-based missiles and are not as responsive to command and control. Current missile subs are scattered over the globe and unable to communicate without revealing their location. And shifting MX to submarines would eliminate one leg of the strategic "triad" bombers, land-based missiles and submarinelaunched missiles.

But those arguments do not apply to small offshore submarines, aided by coastal guidance and radio systems. Such vessels should be able to achieve survivability, with missile accuracy and communications at least comparable to a land-based MX system and at no greater cost, according to preliminary findings of a study by the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment.

The study identifies two main problems with this system, known as the small-submarine underseas mobile plan. Some unforeseen breakthrough in antisubmarine warfare might one day create a simutaneous threat to both the Trident and coastal submarines. Shortages of shipyard capacity might delay deployment until the early 1990s.

But the originators of the small-sub concept, Sidney Drell of Stanford and Richard Garwin of IBM, are convinced that the small sub is practical. It would differ enough from the big Trident sub so that no single antisubmarine warfare breakthrough would threaten both systems. Also, small submarines are being made in West Germany and some could be bought there until U.S. models are

The small-sub idea also has other virtues. It could begin adding invulnerable missiles to the U.S. inventory from the very first subne deployed. The shell-game sy comparison, would gain nothing for U.S. security until there were more shelters than Soviet warheads capable of destroying them. To build that many shelters would take nearly until 1990, by which time construction of a small submarine fleet could also be well un-

Mr. Weinberger is right to take a new look at the small-sub system. The Air Force would not be overjoyed to put its new missiles on Navy vessels. But the system has advantages at a time when the strategic arms treaty is in doubt. The shell games makes little sense without SALT limits on the Soviet missile buildup, which could require 8,250 MX shelters by 1990 and 12,250 by 1995. Small subs could survive a SALT failure.

More important, the small-sub idea offers valuable bargaining chip. Deployment could be curtailed in return for a favorable SALT agreement. That would save money while adding a reasonable quota of survivable missiles to the U.S. arsenal.

Case for Spain in EEC

There is a strong case for the European Common Market lonking afresb at these negotiations [for Spain's entry into the Community]. Until now, the EEC has insisted that candidates may only negotiate about bow to phase in the existing body of Community law — the "acquis communautaire" - and cannot negotiate to change it. But it must be changed if interests are to be reconciled. Some Spanish farmers will need direct income payments if they are to have satisfactory living standards and not at the same time to produce surpluses. If Spain is to join the European Monetary

System, to phase out aids to industry and to draw advantage from the EEC budget, the Community must expand its cash transfers far beyond the present Regional and Social Funds. Such thinking must be generous, but also quick. Before full membership (perhaps in January, 1984) Spain should be invited to participate fully in "political cooperation" on foreign policy-making. It could be given full access to the European Investment Bank, and even send speaking, but not voting, members to the Council of Ministers and the European Parliament. Spain's struggling democracy needs all the help we can muster as it strives to lay the ghosts of an inglorious

NEW YORK - Replying to the congratulations of the Aero Club of America on the invention of a practical flying machine, Messrs. Orville and Wilbur Wright, of Dayton, Ohio, make the first public announcement of the results of their experiments in the past few years. They say that in their latest trial the machine traversed 24 miles in 38 minutes and 3 seconds. For the right to use this invention, the French government will pay $300,000 after proper tests. The inventors state that they have made a total of 160 flights in three years. The latest tests took place in a swampy meadow east of Dayton, from June to October of last year, when the inroads of curiosity seekers stopped them.

ALBANY, N.Y. - When a few furry little caterpillars escaped from a scientist at Medford, Mass., 62 years ago, they began a march of dev-astation that cost New England $100 million. A relentless war is now being waged in the Hudson and Champain valleys to prevent the ravagers from invading the remainder of the country. The New York Conservation Department, in announcing the enormous loss suffered by New England in devastated forest, fruit and shade trees, warned that a new infestation of gipsy moths, which grow from the little catepillars, has just been discovered. A barrier zone has been set up to block the pests' advance, with department scouts and exterminators in constant vigilance.

Violence Against Women

By Wayland Young

L ONDON — There is some-thing of a new sort of feminism in Britain oow. It comes from three stimuli: not only the deep re-cession which throws women out of work quicker than men, thus bringing all the old economic injustices to light again, but also from two quite oddly assorted events — the Williams report oo obscenity last year, and the long huot for the Yorkshire Ripper, now apparently over.

Most visible of the oew groups is Women Against Violence Against Women, wbose well-shaped title immediately proclaims thought as well as protest. It is tak-en from that of a U.S. group they have read about, but never met. Its members do in fact throw paint-filled eggs at the screen in cinemas showing pornographically violent films (though not as WAVAW), and they demonstrate in the streets with plastic lemon-juice contain-ers, and give each other instruction in the martial arts at street corners. corners, which are neither obscure and skulky nor conspicuous and provocative.

Stay at Home

For some of them their commitments arise from living in Leeds during the long, long time of the Ripper, when they heard the city fathers advise women to stay at home in the evenings. They thought that advice should have been given to men. They also think it amazing that so many women should be killed every year (by rapists, etc.) simply because they are women, and that there should be so little public outcry, and they draw a comparison with racial vio-

So: How many? Nobody knows, since the statistics don't reveal. Murder is broken down by victims (i.e. von can tell bow many women, or even young women, are murdered) but oot by circumstance (i.e., whether it was done in a state of sexual excitement, thus hringing it into the category on which the German word Geschlechtsmord sits more easily than the English "sex murder," or in a fit of rage, or for money, or what ool.) One can see the difficulty of getting at this breakdown, but it would be good if someone were to try. What we do know is the number of rapes and of "indecent assaults against females" which are known to the police. (Many crimes are oot reported; these are tip-of-the-ice-berg figures.) Rape has climbed steadily from 300 a year in the early 1950s to 1,170 in 1979, and indecent assault from 7,000 in the early 1950s to 12,000 in 1970, where it still is. (The population of Britain is 55 million.) The rape figures are spectacular, the other ones more in line with the general increase in Watching a Film

There is in short a generally neglected cull taken by a surprisingly large band of mad and destructive men from women in general. The doctrine that watching a film of rape can be a substitute for raping rape can be a substitute for raping someone is still strong, "suggesting it to them puts it out of their minds." The paint-filled eggs and the martial arts training are good gimmicks, and return symbolic violence for the real. But the choice of the screen already makes a lung unscoken assumption; that hunge the properties of the street assumption; that hunge the screen assumption; that hunge the screen assumptions that the screen assumptions that hunge the screen as the scree inspoken assumption; that human conduct is affected by art, education, entertainment and so forth. The truth of this is well-known not to have been demonstrated by social research, and the rather masculine-seeming Williams report rests on this fact. It does, though, hardly seem to need demonstrating, at least to former President Richard Nixon ("That good books do you good is the premise on which all education rests," or words to that effect) and to me The feminists with their eggs were making an obvious gesture.

But not oce that the deep roots of feminism in libertarianism have so far allowed to be rationalized For if you want to get pornographically violent movies off the circuits there is a quicker way, and that is censorship

Keyes Beech's report on the food crisis in Hanoi (IHT, Feb. 19) is revealing in many respects. Unfor-tunately, less emphasis is placed on the real causes of Vietnam's economic failure: excessive military buildup for the purpose of Vietnamese invasion and occupation of Kampuchea and the maintenance of enormous military presence in Laos. United Nations officials in Hanoi have been campaigning for food aids to Vietnam blaming the current shortage on natural causes. Those privileged UN agents may wish to reply to some questions such as: are typhoons something unexperienced by Vietnam until recent years? Why was Vietnam oot confronted with any food crisis even during the peak of the Vietnamese war? How come that all the countries in Southeast Asia including southern Vietnam are reaping better harvests this year with north Vietnam the only exception?

An additional remark: UN offifood aids to Vietnam would prevent the Vietnamese from drawing upon food produce in Kampuche and from settling down in more fertile Kampuchea. The fact is the Vietnamese have already started their settlement in eastern Kampuchea soon after their invasion and have since been funneling supplies into Vietnam from those provided by the international community under an emergency assistance program to the people of Kampu-

U.S. Foreign Polic Zigging and Zagginer:

France: New Best Friend?

By Joseph Kraft

PARIS -1 went to see President Valery Giscard d'Estaing at the Elysce Palace the other day with a single question in mind. Had France, once the bad boy of Europe, suddenly become the new best friend of the United States?

The answer, for the time being anyhow, seems affirmative. Ad verse circumstances in Britain and West Germany have worked to push France forward as the most important U.S. ally against Soviet Leadership accounts for much of what has happened. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, on her visit to Washington last month, concentrated on winning approval for her economic pulicies by link-ing them to those of President Reagan. In the process she gave evidence of a government in so much trouble at home that it could only give ground abroad. Chancellor Helmut Schmidt 1 saw in Bonn in December. His normal air of confidence had given way to edginess. He protested too much about the bad impact of U.S. interest rates on the West German economy and the conse-quent difficulty of meeting defense targets. He wanted passionately even to the point of turning a blind eye on Poland — to preserve his ties with East Germany and the

Out of Bounds

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, though he faces a battle for re-election six weeks hence, was totally at ease. He asked about a cartoon in the New Yorker magazine. He ob-served that the Weimaraner lying at his feet was none too perky. Later, his youngest daughter, who is studying to be a vet, came to take the dog home. She presented the picture of freshness that the president will undoubtedly try to assert as a campaign theme.

Internal politics was a subject Mr. Giscard d'Estaing had ruled out of bounds in what he insisted should be a "conversation" rather than an interview. But his staff had expressed confidence that he would win the elections by picking up Gaullist votes between the first round on April 26 and the runoff on May 10. They also said he would reduce the Communists to a marginal figure in French politics. France was the first subject Mr. Giscard d'Estaing himself discussed. He acknowledged the country had relatively high unemplayment (chemical property) but here. ployment (about 7 percent), but he asserted that there had been important reforms in protecting the poorest workers and people on pensions. With respect to the Soviet Union, France felt it important to stay in touch. Hence a continuing correspondence between Mr. Giscard d'Estaing and Leonid zhnev, and their meeting in War-saw last year. But France had no illusions about Soviet aims. The important point was to engage the Soviet Union in discussions that

The Foreign Office reported Tuesday that Albania so far has rebuffed official British approaches for resuming diplomatic relations, pending return of the gold. Rela-tions were ruptured when Italy un-der Mussolini invaded the country

Bonn has accepted the station-ing of new missiles on its territory, but has emphasized a pledge by NATO, made along with the missile decision, to seek talks with Moscow on limiting the use of medinm-range missiles in Europe.

-At the Communist Party con-

A West German official said on Tuesday that there were reports that the Soviet Union's stepped-up stationing of its own medium-range missiles in western regions of the Soviet Union might be "in its closing stages," in effect meaning that a moratorium would only affect the West.

Steep Price Rises Mark Greece EEC Entry

ATHENS - Greece's entry into the European Economic Community oo Jan. I has been marked by steep, almost daily, price increases and the government is struggling to prevent the surge of inflation from bringing it defeat in the elec-tions scheduled for November. The public perhaps under-standably, tends to link the price increases with the EEC, but Common Market membership is only a small part of the explanation, said Economic Coordination Minister Ioannis Paleokrassas, who is chiefly responsible for dealing with inflation. The peculiar structure of the Greek market, in comparison to American or European standards, is mostly to blame. In the last two months alone, and particularly since Greece be came the Commoo Market's 10th member, the prices of most food-stuffs and basic commodities have risen an average of 20 to 30 percent. Such increases would nor-mally have extended over a year.

View of Papandreou

Yet, despite the waning of the initial euphoria over Common Market membership, the government is still confident prices will be stabilized well before the elections which must be beld this fall.

The Socialist opposition, which has taken a critical stand toward membership in the Commoo Mar-ket, is gaining from the discontent over soaring prices. Andreas Papandreon, the Socialist leader, who demands renegotiation of the terms for Commoo Market membership, said in a recent speech that there was "such chaos developing that the government will in a few months be too embarrassed to even mention the European Community in its election program." The immediate effect of membership was that, under Common Market regulations, subsidies were abolished for local products and goods imported from Commoo Market countries, in both cases pushing up production costs and retail prices. But a closer look at the problem seems to support assertions that Common Market membership, which the government hails as the most beneficial development in the country's modern history, is not the main reason for the rapidity of price increases.

Adamantios Pepelasis, head of the Agricultural Bank, said the

U.S. Firm Fined For French Sale

United Press International
WASHINGTON — The Commerce Department says it has cut the export privileges of a Califor-nia firm because the company al-legedly sold France equipment used in nuclear weapons development, without permission.

The department said Tuesday it has denied Team Corp., of South El Monte, Calif., all exporting privileges until the end of May, and imposed a $10,000 fine. Half the fine will be waived if the com-pany complies with government regulations during a ooe-year prooatlooary period.

The department said the sale did oot involve national security, although the equipment was for spe-cialized vibration testing "capable of use in ouclear weapons development." The company oeither admitted nor denied the allegation but agreed to pay the fine.

main problem stemmed from spec-ulative wholesalers who used Common Market membership to contend that prices must rise quickly to general European levels, instead of rising gradually over a five-year transition period. When the government refused to bow to the demands of wholesalers for large increases, especially for meal and dairy products, merchants and importers withheld their goods to cause an artificial shortage and price rises.

Cheap Foodstuffs

Mr. Paleokrassas succeeded in breaking up this maneuver and restoring market order by ordering large imports of cheap foodstuffs, but not before a wave of police raids, scuffles and arrests.

Another reason given for the difficulty in stabilizing prices and ehecking the soaring inflation rate, which has been at 26 percent a year compared with the Common Market's 14 percent average, is the antiquated structure of the Greek

Mr. Paleokrassas said prices were unnecessarily high because of the large oumber of retail outlets, causing exorbitant distribution costs. Greece has as many retail shops as Britain although Greece's population is only a sixth as large. Similarly, self-employed merchants, tradesmen and workers account for 34.9 percent of the labor force, compared to 7.4 percent in the United States and 6.8 percent in Britain.

The lack of an efficient distributioo system also permits the existence of numerous middlemen claiming a share of the final selling price. Added to this problem are high rents, equivalent to those in Brussels, meaning that Greek merebants have to impose a far higher profit margin to compensate for lower turnover. The economic coordination minister said that retail prices, often 200 percent above production prices, were "the highest markup in Europe."

Bonn Supports Madrid

BONN (Reuters) - Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher Wednesday underlined West Germany's commitment to speeding up Spain's entry into the EEC, a Foreign Ministry statement said. Mr. Genscher and the Spanish Socialist opposition leader, Felipe Gonzalez, agreed during breakfast talks on "the importance of a rapid handling of negotiations for Span-ish entry into the EEC in strengthening and securing democracy in Spain," the statement said.

Bonn urged swift action on Spanish entry after last month's abortive coup attempt in Madrid. Expectations that Spain and Portugal would join the EEC by early 1983 were dimmed when France expressed reservations last year, bot diplomatic sources in Bonn said that France was unlikely to press its objections after the French presidential elections in April and May.

Duke Power's unfinished Cherokee No. 1 unit.

Unfinished Power Plant in U.S. South Symbolizes Crisis in Nuclear Industry

By Robert D. Hershey Jr. New York Times Service

CAFFNEY, S.C. — Julian W. Davis was harely out of Clemson University a decade ago when the Duke Power Co. began to plan a giant, three-unit, nuclear-powered electric-generating plant in this remote northwest-ern corner of South Carolina. Now 34 years old and the project's senior construction engi-neer, Mr. Davis stood recently on a bluff overlooking his handiwork, a venture once dubbed "P-$1" after the year it was supposed to be Cherokee unit No. 1, he said, pointing toward a maze of structural steel and the circular concrete walls be hopes will someday contain what he calls the "home of the heat." It is about 10-percent built. Unit No. 2, just off to the right, is merely a well-defined excavation in dirt and rock. In the distance lies what appears to be a small lake: a rough bole in the ground that is the site of unit No. 3.

Earlier this month, in the latest of a series of construction slowdowns, Duke announced that even unit No. I would be delayed indefinitely. Some think it may never produce a kilowatt of electricity for the 4 million Piedmont Carolinians in Duke's service area. About $440 million now sunk into Cherokee may have to be written off.

Development Slowed

Such is the state to which nuclear energy bas fallen across the United States. Regulatory delays, hold-downs on rates, the still-unsolved waste disposal problem, lower than expected demand for electricity, inflation and the lack of clear government policy have combined in stop the nuclear power industry almost in its

The loss of public confidence that accompanied the accident at Three Mile Island in March, 1979, seems to have been the final blow. No utility has since ordered a single nuclear reactor and many believe the United States has already lost its technology leadership in an industry that it pioneered and once thoroughly dominated.

"My company dropped a hundred million dollars on a plant we never turned a forkful of earth on," said an emhittered middle-aged offi-cial of the heavily nuclear Northern States Power Co. "I don't think we'll see another new nuclear plant built during the rest of my ca-reer." be added. It's a comment often heard among utility excecutives today.

The Reagan administration, however, has raised industry hopes that nuclear power will again be promoted as a U.S. energy source.

"I am a strong supporter of nuclear energy." said President Reagan's energy secretary, James B. Edwards, as he began his first meeting with reporters last month. "As you look across the horizon in find the answers to our energy problems, there's no real place in turn in the next 30 years other than nuclear to belp keep us from being all hostages to foreign

Mr. Edwards has repeatedly called for the "political courage" to solve the waste-disposal problem, declared his support for the Clincb River Breeder Reactor program in Tennessee and proposed that the government acquire the idle, privately built nuclear reprocessing plant in Barnwell, S.C. The Reagan administration's budget for nuclear operations in 1982 was $1.247 billion against the Carter administration's $961 million authorization.

More will certainly be needed. Nuclear power accounted for less than 11 percent of the electricity generated in the United States tast year, a figure that could rise to 18 percent by 1985 if all the plants under way before 1979

But as Duke's experience shows, even this much growth is increasingly in doubt unless the Reagan administration can move quickly to make good on pledges to revive nuclear

"It's elementary arithmetic," observed Carl

Horn Jr., the 59-year-old chairman of Duke's board of directors who long ago gave up hopes of presiding over commissioning ceremonies at the plant. "You've got double-digit inflation and double-digit interest rates - and each one in itself can double the cost of a plant in 10 years," be explained. Originally, the three Cherokee units were to cost a total of just under $4 billion; now the tab for just two of them would be $6.7 hillion.

Duke Power, a company of above-average efficiency in a growing Sun Belt area, never-theless finds itself with few financial options fts bonds are rated only A, the third-ranking category, and the ratio of the price of its common stock to its book, or liquidation, value barely exceeds the industry average of 70 per-cent. Not since last October has an electric utility rated lower than double-A been able to market a 30-year bond, a previously typical maturity for construction money, observed William H. Grigg, Duke's senior vice president for legal affairs and finance.

Even if its bond rating were higher, Duke would probably have to pay a higher rate of interest on new debt than it has ever been allowed to earn by either of the state utility com-missions with which it deals.

"To bave financed those plants at that level of cost would have required, just to finish Cherokee, that we raise at least $1.5 billion of new equity capital and $2 hillion of new longterm deht," said Mr. Grigg. "We simply can-not reasonably afford to build them under

"It's not my function to liquidate the com-pany," said Mr. Hom as he referred in a yel-low legal pad on which he had listed 12 new stock issues in the last !! years, a majority of them at below book value. "We just ain't going to do this anymore.'

By slowing work on No. 1 unit still further and by halting construction on No. 2. Duke hopes to avoid moving past the point of no return — when it would have so much money invested it would be forced in complete Cherokee regardless of cost and at great risk to its

But escalating construction and financing costs, at least partially predictable, are only one of the industry's current problems.

A hig one is its image. Although some industry officials argue that the Three Mile Island episode showed that an accident need not mean disaster, public confidence was severely

Many, in fact, admit that the industry was ill-prepared for such incidents and that it, along with the government as principal sponsor, probably "oversold" consumers on the merits of nuclear power.

Moreover, more than 35 years after the United States began generating atomic waste, it has yet in dispose permanently of its first pound. Utilines store the spent fuel in specially constructed facilities alongside their power plants and many are now running out of room.

Despite the assertions by many that the technology already exists for permanent stor-age, probably by hurial, it is not known for certain what will happen as highly radioactive wastes age, since the process cannot be experimentally speeded up as can, say, tests of shoe leather or shock absorbers.

Disposing Wastes

In addition, a way must be found politically to locate acceptable sites for disposing of high-

There is no doubt that it will take heavy government regulation of nuclear reactor safey and massive government investment in ra-licactive waste disposal to have a significantly larger nuclear industry in this country," said William W. Lewis, an assistant secretary of energy in the Carter administration. "Even then, it will take a drastic improvement in the finan-cial health of the nation's utilities to improve

In the end, industry officials say, the extent chairman of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, a post considerably more important to the industry than Mr. Edwards' pro-nuclear secretaryship of energy. The appointment of Joseph M. Hendrie as acting chairman recently was generally regarded as reflecting eagerness on the part of the administration to speed up licensing applications. · The start of a wide public mission of the of nuclear rejuvenation depends not only on curbing inflation and finding a way to dispose of spent fuel, but also on the following factors: The appointment of a strong, sympathetic chairman of the Nuclear Regulatory Commis-

Niger's Severe Military Governmer Manages to Halt Starvation in Saho

By Leon Dash

Nathungton Post Service

I LAMEY, Niger — The devastating Sahehan drought and an drought and pervasive civilian corruption provided the pretext for the bloody army coup that brought a military government to power here seven years ago. Yet, perhaps uniquely for Africa, Niger's severe military government has achieved what it announced it had taken power to accomplish — self-sufficiency in food and an end to mass starvation.

Situated in Central Africa's semiarid Sahelian belt. Niger will always be at the mercy of an belt. Niger will always be at the mercy of the weather's vagaries, but since 1974 it has plowed its meager resources and what foreign aid it has received into increasing production of staple grains with such intensity that the country may achieve a level of production that exceeds its 2.7 percent annual population growth rate. That would be a first for contemporary Africa.

Officials in African countries, many of which were self-sufficient in food before independence, have become alarmed in recent ears by the ever-increasing amounts of scarce foreign exchange their countries spend on imported foodstuffs.

Africa's estimated population of 400 million is increasing on a yearly average of 3 percent while food production, where it is not declining, is increasing at a rate far below the birthrate. Despite huge outlays in foreign assistance and grandiose agricultural plans, most African countries have not been able to reverse this trend. The one exception is Niger.

Austere Ruler

"For the past three years," said the director for the U.S. Agency for International Development in Niger. Jay Johnson, "Niger is the only Sahelian country out of the total of eight that has not needed any emergency food dona-

'And it appears now that food production in Niger is exceeding population growth." Mr. Johnson added.

Niger's austere military ruler, Col. Seyni Kountche, took power from what many neutral observers have ebaracterized as a corrupt and mismanaged elected civilian government that had exacerbated the painful problems the country of 5.5 million suffered during the 1968-1974 Sahelian drought, Niger is fortunate in having large amounts of uranium in its northern desert regions around the town of Arlit. Earnings from urani-um exports, which doubled to 400,000 tons a year in the past two years, have, in part, fueled the country's successful program of stepping up food production. The country may face some tighter economic measures in the near future, bowever, since the world market price of uranium dropped from $46 a pound last year to the current price of $32 a pound.

The plunge in uranium earnings, 75 percent of Niger's revenue, may lead to a severe cutback in a number of expensive development projects and a money crunch in the mid-1980s when a number of the large loans come due. Presently the world's fourth producer of uranium after the United States, Canada and the combined exports of South Africa and Namibia (South-West Africa), Niger may soon face stiff marketing competition from Australia as that country increases its production.

Grass-Roots Body

Although the government refers to itself of-ficially as provisional, there have been no signs that Col. Kountche plans to allow a return to civilian government in the near future. Retirement Dream Is Becoming Financial Nightmare

By Warren Weaver Jr. New York Times Service

ASHINGTON - The dream of retirement at age 65. which has sustained working Americans for a half-century and more, is fading under the implacable pressure of economic and social trends that appear to be irreversible.

Except for a relative few with inherited or acquired wealth, the generation of Americans now beginning to turn 35 can no longer expect to enjoy reasonable financial security if they sup working when they reach 60 or 65. Early retirement, encouraged hy some employers and welcomed by employees in recent, more prosperous times, will become a less and less attractive option for those passing 55 or 60, and in 30 years the option will be virtually foreclosed. The majority of Americans may have in work full-time until they near 70 and, in some cases, part-time after that.

This sobering picture is just beginning to emerge, according to government and academic authorities in the varied fields involving aging, even as Congress resumes grappling with its most immediate manifestation, the financial crisis in the Social Security system. In another 30 years, when the swollen post World War II generation is heginning to retire, its full impact will be staggeringly dear.

The authorities are generally agreed on two counts: Most Americans must lower their expectations about the time and the conditions of their retirement, and the government and private employers must begin planning how to cushion the blow.

"Historically," says Barbara Boyle Torrey, a federal expert on pensions, "There has been an implicit social contract that the working generations will help support the retired generations either privately or publicly. But that contract may have to be renegotiated if the future size of the retired generation more than doubles relative to the size of he working generation."

Fixed Incomes

The percentage of population aged 65 and older is doubling between 1960 and 2040, under the most conservative estimates. Higher Social Security taxes that took effect in January are a result of the early pressure of that Inflation already has produced serious economic hardships for retired people on fixed incomes, but the prospective shortage of retirement income in the next century will take place even if rising prices are hrought under control, the data indicate. If inflation contin-ues, the retirement problem will be even worse. The impending imbalance between working and retired populations assumes relatively little change in the current birthrate, which averages very slightly more than two children per ouple. if couples born during the boom" suddenly begin producing much larger families, the picture could change somewhat, but experts do not foresee such a trend.

The question of whether most Americans will be able to afford comfortable retirement at age 65, painful enough in itself, is only one that demographic and economic trends are raising for the future. Other disquieting prospects include these:

· Many people who might otherwise have enough financial resources to retire may find themselves unable to afford adequate health care. Medical and hospital costs are rising at rates that threaten to make them insupportable for the great majority.

 There is next to no hope that private pensions will provide an adequate income supplement by 2010, when the retirement income crisis is expected to be acute.

 Married couples hoping to spend retirement together are less and less likely to be able to do so. For reasons scientists are unable to adequately explain, American women are outliving men by 10 years or more, and that gap is expected to widen still further by the next cen-Retired people who count on their children or younger relatives for financial and psychological support may be in for a rude shock. Some sociologists believe the country is heading toward an era of intergenerational conflict.

The most serious problem for the aging, the prospective shortage of retirement income, is doubly ominous because both its dimensions and timetable are firmly fixed. The high birthrates that swelled population beginning about 1945 and the low rates that followed in the 1960s and 1970s are a matter of unalterable fact.

Sbort of an intervening plague or atomie holocaust, the "baby boom" generation, now roughly 15 to 35 years old, will begin turning 65 in 2010, less than 30 years from now. At the same time, the productive working population of the country will be shrinking in relative size. In 2020 there will be only about three and a half working-age Americans for every person of 65 or older, as against five today.

Population Patterns

For the Social Security system, the basic foundation of retirement income for most people, these population patterns threaten bankruptcy. Now, three workers contribute to the Social Security fund for every retired beneficiary. In 2020, two workers will support one beneficiary, and their contributions would have to increase 50 percent to make up the Social Security is not a precisely calculated insurance plan but a rough-estimate system that barely manages these days to collect enough money in a year to cover the benefit checks it must send to the retired. When income falls below outgo, as is likely on a small scale in the next few years and certain on a large scale early in the next century, insolvency can be avoided only by raising taxes or cutting benefits

Putting the retirement problem another way, the President's Commission on Pension Policy estimates that before 2020 the United States will bave the same share of residents 65 or older as Florida, the most popular retirement haven, does now, about 17 percent. And Florida then will have nearly 30 percent.

The retirement of the unusually large "baby boom" generation is the largest single factor threatening Social Security and thus the of retirement, but it is far from the oal Steady increases in American longevit the size of the over-65 population, com-now regarded as normal, also contribute same pressure. The average American has more life.

This prospect brings the increasing cost of retirement and the economic pot the Reagan administration into head-or sion. The president has pledged that he not seek reductions in Social Security ment benefits or Medicare payments as his budget-cutting for 1982, but the

Oil Firms Target Canada's Arctic Islands

OTTAWA — After several years in the shadow of major oil discoveries in Canada's Beaufort Sea and Hibernia Basin, exploration in Canada's high arctic islands soon may become a center of attention. There are early indications that a mostly offshore area, known to hold large amounts of natural gas, also contains major oil reserves. The area is about 100 miles in diameter and is north of Melville Island, some 600 miles north of continental Canada An executive of Panarctic Oils Ltd. told a committee of Canada's parliament Tuesday that, based on drilling results, one structure in the region is estimated to hold 280 million barrels in one geological stratum alone.

Charles Hetherington, president and chief executive officer of Panarctic, cautioned that the estimate is based on seismic data and the results of one drill test. Panarctic announced last week that the Skate B-80 well flowed some 775 barrels a day of oil from a 15-foot interval and 5.7 million cubic feet of natural gas from a slightly longer section.

Faint Attention

Those results drew only faint attention at the time, but analysts and geologists say the Skate B-80 well may have opened the door to the region's oil reserves. Moreover, Mr. Hetherington's estimate of the reserves at Skate could be conservative, they say.

What Mr. Hetherington did not tell the committee was that the estimate of reserves it has do not delling to the relatively.

is based only on drilling to the relatively shallow level of about 3,000 feet, where the test took place. Skate B-80 is being drilled to a target depth of some 6,000 feet, and further

Panarctie and partners have two other wells being drilled near the Skate location. Together, the three lie to the north, east and west of Longheed Island in the Queen Flizabeth Islands region that oil experts call the high arctic islands. Mr. Hetherington added that the other wells, Cisco B-66 and Maclean 1-72, have also had petroleum shows, which

The indications of gas or oil," he said, have been found by coring and electric logs. Production testing is expected shortly at Cisco and Maclean, with work on all three wells scheduled for completion by late April. What excites geologists about Skate is the relatively shallow level at which the oil was discovered. To date, vast amounts of natural gas have been found in the arctic islands, but oil has been scarce, appearing only rarely in deeper, older levels.

li has been thought that the geological "cooking" of biological matter had not been lengthy enough in the arctic islands to produce attractive quantities of oil. What Skate shows, says Edward Zederayko, a Calgary-based analyst with Gordon Securities Ltd., is that the time, temperature and pressure have

An Oily Trend

That may provide the needed start to make more oil finds, as geological under-standing of the area is built up. "Once they get into an oily trend, they often come into a

In the large area around the Skate well, the geology of these structures has become more apparent, says Douglas Waylett, vice president of exploration for Panarctie.

Mr. Waylett says the composition of the major bodies is so well known now that "there's not much risk" in drilling. "If it's a closed (fully defined) structure, there's going to be either oil or gas" in virtually every large

But while the geology of the arctic islands has proved promising, oil production from the region may be some time away.

The transportation problems are enormous. Shipping under arctic conditions requires icebreaker tankers. Mr. Hetherington told the paralismentary committee that pro-duction from Skate and any other oearby wells, if economical, would be by pipeline to the shore of Lougheed Island. From there, a tanker terminal would be oeeded for loading, he said. There are not any estimates of the

Also, Suncor Inc., Phillips Petroleum Canada Ltd., Dome Petroleum Ltd., Phoenix Resources Co. and Global Arctic Islands Ltd. have interests in the wells.

Wall Street Backs Off After Run at 1,000

From Agency Dupatcher
NEW YORK — The Dow Jones industrial average was narrowly higher Wednesday after failing to pierce the 1,000 level in a rally sparked by lower interest rates.

Trading was fairly active.

The Dow average, up oearly 6 points to 998 in the early afternoon, was up 1.53 points to close at 994.06.

Advances led declines 927 to

The market had been down 3 points at the outset following Tuesday's 10.26-point crop and rallied around ooon. It closed at 1,002.79 on Monday. Turnover amounted to 55.7 million compared to 74.1 Tuesday. Prices were mixed in moderate trading of American Stock Exchange issues.

Analysts said they were coocerned the rally would run into more profit-taking pressures. Brokers said the market was aided by lower interest rates. Signs that a further industry-wide decline in the prime rate could be imminent came Wednesday as Chemical Bank announced it would cut its prime to 17 percent from 171/2 Thursday. Citibank said it lowered its broker loan rate to 15¼ percent from 15% perceot, effective immediately.

Citibank is the first to announce a reduction to the 154-percent level, although earlier in the day Irving Trust lowered its rate to 15½ percent and Continental Illi-nois National Bank and Trust to 15% percent. Most other banks are quoting a 16 percent rate. At midsession the credit markets continued to rally after the New York Federal Reserve Bank allowed the Fed funds rate to trade below 13 percent, dealers said.

Although it is difficult to in-terepret Fed activity on bank settlement day, dealers said the Fed could be indicating a willingness to allow the funds rate to fall further because of the way it has been supplying reserves to the system. Besides declining rates, observers said the market is likely to be propped up by the fact that many investors are replacing borrowed shares they sold earlier prior to Tuesday's market drop. This tends to blunt a severe decline. In London, gold closed at $509.50-511 an ounce after active trading little changed from its opening $508-509.50 but around $20 above Tuesday's $490-492 lose, dealers said. cconomie growth will pick up ln Europe the dollar resumed its again in the second half."

U.S. Profits, GNP Slump

WASHINGTON - Profits of U.S. businesses slowed in the fourth quarter of last year, and the U.S. gross national product rose less than previously estimated, the government reported Wednesday. In addition, the Federal Reserve Board reported that U.S. manufac-turers used about 79.3 percent of their production capacity in February — down 0.7 percentage point from January's 80 percent. Capacity utilization had risen in each of the previous six months. Before-tax corporate profits rose 4.9 percent in the fourth quarter of 1980 after climbing 9 percent in the third, the Commerce Depart-ment said. After-tax profits rose 3.1 percent compared with 8.6 percent for the previous three months.

The "real" gross national product rose at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 3.8 percent in the fourth quarter to $2.7 trillion, the department said in its third and final eximates.

The GNP was originally put at a 5 percent fourth quarter annual rate of increase, but was revised to 4 percent last month,

Responding to gloomy statistics for February released Tuesday —a 0.5 percent drop in February's in-dustrial production, the first dip in seven months, as well as a dramatic 25 percent decline in housing starts -- economists said they little to encourage them.

Federal Reserve Board Governor Lyle Gramley said a strong ecooomy during the past nine months has caused a "virtual disappearance of forecasts of a double-dip recession" and "the consensus among forecasters is that a serious recession this year is unlikely.

Speaking to the Bostoo Eco-nomic Club, he said expectations are now that, "following a lull in the second quarter, the pace of TOKYO - The Bank of Japan plans to introduce a new loan sys-tem similar to West Germany's special Lombard facility, bank of-ficials said Wednesday.

Under this facility, the central benk manipulates money market rates by lending funds to commer-cial banks on the security of quali-

The West German version, which was redesigned late last month, leaves undefined how much credit the central bank will supply, for how long or for what rate of interest. This total flexibility maximizes the central bank's ability to drive short-term rates in whatever direction it wants instantenously. Other central banks are also reported to be studying adopt-ing the Bundesbank's technique.

Westinghouse Reaches Part Accord on Uranium

The Associated Press

PTTTSBURGH — Westinghouse for Sept. I in Chicago. an out-of-court settlement in an antitrust case in which 12 members of an alleged uranium cartel will pay Westinghouse $39 million in cash and 9 million pounds of ura-nium over the next five years.

Westinghouse, a leader in the construction of nuclear generating plants, had previously settled with plants, had previously settled with seven other producers. The largest announced settlement was with Gulf Oil Corp., which oo Jan. 29 agreed to pay $25 million and de-liver 13 million pounds of uranium to certain utilities that had supply contracts with Westinghouse, with up to $75 million of the proceeds those uranium sales going to Westinghouse

Tuesday's settlement substantially reduced the international significance of the suit by removing 10 of the foreign defendants from Because the alleged cartel had operated overseas, the Westing-house suit sought to have companies whose activity was legal in the countries where it occurred judged liable for their purported impact on the United States. Foreign gov-emments objected to what they considered an unwarranted effort to extend the reach of U.S. laws. There were 29 defeodants named in the original suit. Of the six that have not settled, five are U.S. companies and only one a foreign company, a Westinghouse spokesman said. Trial is scheduled lo a similar development, the Tennessee Valley Authority said that seven mutinational companies that it had accused of uranium price fixing in a 1977 lawsuit reached a settlement with it in Londoo Monday. The settlement was with seven of 12 defendants originally named in the 1977 suit. The TVA said the settlement, which relieved it of contractual obligations to buy uranium at rapidly rising prices, would save its cus-tomers $100 million.

The companies that settled included Rio Tinto-Zinc Corp. Ltd. and RTZ Services Ltd. of Britain; Nuclear Fuels Corp. of South Afri-ca; Rio Algom Ltd., Denison Mines Ltd. and Noranda Mines Ltd. of Canada. and Rio Algom Corp. of the United States.
In its suit, Westinghouse alleged that the defendants had violated antitrust laws by forming a cartel to drive uranium middlemen, such as Westinghouse, out of business through price-fixing and boycotts.

The defendants involved in Tuesday's settlement are Rio Tin-to-Zine and RTZ Services of Britain; Rio Algom Corp. of the Unit-ed States and Rio Algom Ltd. of Canada; CRA Ltd., Australia; Anglo American Corp. and Nuclear Fuels Corp. of South Africa; Mary Kathleen Uranium Ltd. and Pancontinental Mining Ltd. of Australia; Noranda Mines and Denisoo Mines of Canada, and Denisoo

Mines Inc. of the United States.

"A supply-side tax cut aims at growth" is it, they ask, that will reasing the incentives to pro- not show up in the GNP? How can increasing the incentives to produce new income by lowering the rate at which it is taxed, not at re-turning dollars to the taxpayers pockets. It relies on the growth of incentives, rather than the growth of the federal budget, to stimulate the economy. In the Keynesian picture, higher real economic growth comes from higher spend-

Apparently the only answer is

Unfortunately, that is not what other nations, when monetary polirate reductions would bring in more revenue, not less, almost immediately. But deficits do not worry them. As Mr. Roberts wrote, "Delaying the tax cuis because the deficit is too large is a way of sending a signal that the administration doesn't have confidence in its own policy."

President Reagan, however, chose to do just that — delay the tax cuts - specifically because of what making the personal income tax retroactive to Jan. I would have done to the deficit. On that score, and others, such as the large business tax cuts included, the Reagan package is a compromise with pure supply-side theory.

ing and brings inflation in its wake. In the supply-side model, higher growth results from higher production, which lowers the inflation rate," Mr. Roberts explained.

Spending and Growth

Mr. Roberts and other true supphy-siders, such as Rep. Kemp, thus make a sharp distinction between "spending" and "growth," and that is why there are so few true supply-side economists. To most economists this distinction most economists, this distinction, by definition, is not valid.

The "higher spending" Mr. Roberts mentions is spending as recorded in the United States' national income and product accounts. The most familiar part of this system of national accounting is the gross national product. As usually presented, the GNP is the total of personal consumption expendimes, business purchases of new structures and equipment, business or personal investment in new residential structures, the dif-ference between imports and exports, the increase or decrease in siness inventories, and the purchase of goods and services by federal, state and local governments. The traditional notions of stimulating the economy during recessions or slack periods usually involved either increasing government purchases of goods and serment purchases of goods and services directly, say, by boosting outlays for public works projects, or by cutting taxes. Tax cuts do not show up directly in the GNP figures, but they increase the amount of money individuals or bearing the control of the cutting the control of businesses have to spend them-selves. This combination of higher spending by individuals, business es and government caused the level of economic activity generally to rise as both idle workers and machines were put back to work.

The true supply-siders deride this, saying it simply leads to inflation. But they do not explain how it is that the "higher growth [that results] from higher production" does not show up in the GNP figures just like higher consumer or pres just like higher consumer or. government spending. And of course it does, critics assert.

To many skeptics, it is almost as if the inflationary or noninflationary characteristics of higher spending depended entirely on motivation. If the government seeks to stimulate the economy, and thus spending, with a tax cut, that is inflationary. If it seeks to stimulate production, and thus spending, by cutting marginal tax rates, that is

However, the true supply theory asually has one major corollary. Total spending, and therefore in-flation, is to be controlled by limiting growth of the money supply.

The heart of the supply-side idea is that tax cuts can provide incentives for growth even as monetary policy fights inflation," declared a Wall Street Journal editorial recently. At another point, the Journal, which has played a major role in publicizing supply-side economics, said, "The Reagan plan proposes to reduce demand through a restrictive monetary pol-icy, thus combatting inflation. But it proposes to stimulate real growth by tax cuts that change incentives in the economy."

But again, the critics point out, we measure "demand" in the comprehensive figures of the GNP accounts. What kind of

The true supply-sider also is not very interested in the size of the federal budget deficit. The well, at the southern point of Cape Idabato, 90 kilometres (56 miles) northwest of Victoria, showed a deep reservoir of gas and a second reservoir of oil.

No indication of the size of the find was given but the announce-ment said Cameroon's oil production could reach 28 million barrels in 1981, rising from 19.5 million in 1980. Elf Serepca is operator and holds 51 percent of the permit, while Pecten Cameroon has 49 percent. If further wells show the structure to be commercially viable, production would be in associ-ation with Ste. Nationale des Hydrocarbures du Cameroon.

Cameroon has proved reserves of 200 billion cubic meters of gas, according to industry sources.

Soft Electrical Sector Seen in W. Germany

FRANKFURT - The West erman electrical industry expects little growth in 1981, after real growth in 1980 production of 4.9 percent, the president of the industry association said Wednesday.

After strong growth during the first half of 1980, production and oew order levels weakened and profit margins on the increased output began to slip, Wolfgang Seelig said at a news conference

The industry's after tax profits were just under 2 percent of sales in 1980, compared with 2.4 percent ring 1979, be said.

Mr. Seelig, a member of the management board of Siemens, at-tributed the decline in profitability to a 4½-percent rise in labor costs and a flattening in productivity in the second balf of last year. He added that production results this year will depend on the outcome of current industry wage negotia-

Industry Production In France Declines

Turnover is expected to grow somewhat more than inflation and reach about 112 billioo Deutsche marks in 1981, after rising 8.6 per cent in 1980 to 108 billion DM. Mr. Seelig said. Sales of capital goods last year rose 9.6 percent and consumer goods rose 4.5 per-

Foreign orders rose 8.3 percent in the year, but most of the in-crease came during the first half. In foreign trade, imports of electrical goods rose 19.3 percent to 26.5 billion DM, substantially more than the 13.2 percent increase in exports, to nearly 40 bil-lion DM, Mr. Seelig said. The electrical industry's 1980 production capacity utilization sank to 82 percent from 85 percent in 1979, according to association

INDIRA GANDHI

By Dom Moraes. Little, Brown. 336 pp. S15.

Reviewed by Lewis M. Simons

DURING the height of the 1975 Emergency in India, Dom Morses found himself sitting opposite Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, then the effective dictator of her country. and staring into her "totally uninterested" eyes. Moraes had gone to Mrs. Gandhi's office to ask her for funds so that he could produce some educational films. She arranged it. Then she asked him, across her massive desk, if he wanted to stay in In-

As though a light has been switched on in his head, Moraes tells us, he suddenly "realized that she had given me something back which I had com-pletely lost: she had given me roots." An Indian by birth who had been ducated in Britain, spent most of his life there and now held a British passport. Moraes was not sure just how Mrs. Gandhi imparted the gift to him. "She may not have intended to do so," he notes, "but to me quietness is more important than words."

Endearing Lodira

This frequently pretentious biography, which begins with Mrs. Gandhi's ancestors in the Vale of Kashmir in 1716 and traces her life up to her latest inauguration in 1980, is full of such deductive conclusions based on words unspoken, gestures, sniffles and the fluttering of an eyelid. Perhaps this is not surprising, since Mrs. Gan-dhi, as Moraes and most writers who have tried to interview her have learned, says little of consequence and rarely offers any insights into herself.

Possibly because of what he perceived as her gift of roots to him. Moraes has written a pacan, a book that Mrs. Gandhi could hardly fail to find pleasing. It is almost a song of love, unrequited in the main, which Moraes delivers with candor. It requires considerably less interpretation from the reader than Mrs. Gandhi's cryptic interviews required of the author:

"I found myself liking her," he writes of their first formal meeting. "It is very difficult to say why one starts to like anybody. The sexual re-lationship between casual lovers, or husband and wife, seems to me usually to be a fusion, magnetic almost, of opposite poles . . . hut the actual lik-ing of a person with whom you are not physically involved is different n. . I had liked her and had been of no interest to her.

Besides repeatedly describing her infrequent and fleeting smiles as "dazzling" and "captivating," Moraes makes frequent references to the appearance of Mrs. Gandhi's head, perinkling throughout his description the adjectives "neat," "patrician," "pretty," "noble," "dapper" and "handsome."

Fall from Favor

In the end, all this adoration was for naught, Shortly before she was re-elected to Parliament in 1979, Mrs. Gandhi apparently picked up some rumor of uncomplimentary articles Moraes had supposedly written about her. Her reaction was to send him a letter severing their relationship and giving him no opportunity to respond.

The story Moraes unfolds between his initial discovery that he liked "the lady" and her letter of dismissal tells us little oot already included in other biographics. There is Indira's grandfa-ther. Motilal Nehru, an incorrigible anglophile until his fateful meeting with Mahatma Gandhi, the saintly crusader for Indian independance; In-dira's fastidious father, Jawaharla Nehru, destined to become India's first prime minister; Indira's long-suf-fering husband, Feroze Gandhi; her sons, Sanjay and Rajiv.

Above all there is Indira, who in childhood dreamed of herself as Joan of Arc and who, as an adult, Moraes writes, dreams of martyrdom, but somehow always manages to survive. Moraes, whose literary reputation is based mainly on his poetry, provides a journalistic synopsis of Mrs. Gan and rise to power. First io her fat hed comparished wand eventually on her arrival at the zenith by militar boundary victory over Pakistan; her rather the Unital cipitous decline and her return to the France's office she now occupies.

But unlike his father, the late by the Brofits will be made an newspaper editor of his era, the late for makes only fleeting and fer for makes forts at objectivity.

A light second-hand opening of one spade by East gave him some short-term advantage by complicating life for his opponents, but boomeranged in the play. South chose to overcall one no-trump, looking for a vulnera-hle game, rather than make the obvious trap pass, which could lead to a nonvulnerable penalty.

West showed his clubs, and North drove to game via a cue-bid of two spades. Three no-trump would have been an excellent contract if South had held two or more diamonds, but the eccentric singleton left him with major problems.

West led the spade eight, and it

The spade queen was cashed and club was led. East took his two club tricks and found himself on lead it this position:

Knowing that a spade lead would give the declarer two tricks, he hit on the only disastwo tricks, he had on the only disastrous play: the heart jack. That's Pressure'

And despite his career record. Weiskopf suffers the signity of having to win one of the coming three tour mannents to qualify for next month's Masters in gusta, Ga. "That's pressure," he said. Although he s among the early leaders in the Doral that ended and who finished size for 10th with a 282 nday, he finished tied for 10th with a 282. Even though he is relatively old for a touring pro, he remains one of those with great potential. In that way, life has virtually stopped for Weiskopf.

Tall for a golfer, at 6 feet 3 inches, and with great strength still in his strapping 185-pound body. Weiskopf has a game that seems to have been constructed piece by piece from the department because the department of the strength of t structed piece by piece from the drawing board. "His swing," says Bob Toski, the golf instructor, "is about the best in the game."

But golf, "the eternal quest for scratch," as P.G.
Wodehouse called it, is more than physical. "There are the mysteries of the mind," Weiskopf says, "that are often unfathomable."

The mysteries of Weiskopf's mind in particular have confused many of his fellow pros. At times he has been moody and impatient, rude to spectators and colleagues and self-destructive.

He has stalked off courses in disgust with his inability to achieve perfection. At Westchester in 1975, he quit in the second round on the 12th hole (for what he says are complicated reasons) and was slapped with a $3,000 fine and given a year's probation.

"He was a quitter," said Dave Hill, a longtime tour

"Through the years," said Frank Beard, another tour veteran, "Tom and I have been good friends. He can be a charming guy. And I respect his ability, as everyone does. But too often he has been a 10-year-old child who has been given a million-dollar gift and told, 'Here, take care of it.'" When He Was Good . . .

Oh, but when he was good, be was so, so good. In an eight-week period in 1973, he won five tournaments, including the British Open. And his shots — he once hit an iron around a tree and onto the green, causing his caddie to drop the bag of clubs and fall flat on the fairpass.

Hill sees a change in Weiskopf — a developing maturity. Beard is not so sure. Both are waiting to see. "One day," Hill says, "Tom could come out and chew up everyone consistently. He's still capable of it."

In so many words, those sentiments were expressed in Weiskopf's rookie year. Stars like Ben Hogan and Arnold Palmer bore witness that Weiskopf could become, with Nicklaus, the dominating golfer of his era.

Beyond the stimming physical provess, Weiskopf bore other resemblances to Nicklaus: He was from Ohio State (they played on the same team when Nicklaus was a junior and he was a freshman), he was blond like Nicklaus and, like Nicklaus, he could hit the ball so far it seemed the golf course had shrunk.

"I started believing all those clippings," Weiskopf said, "And when I didn't live up to them right away, I couldn't accept it. I was trying to be what people expected me to be.

"I missed the cut in my first three tournaments. I had begun on the tour with $1.500, and I was starting to run out of mooey. I got so down on myself. I said in the clubhouse after the third tournament, 'I quit. I'm going have a starting to the starting to the starting tournament and the same starting to the starting tournament.

And only a bogey and a double bogey on the last two holes prevented him from winning the next event, the Tucson Open. "I finished 10th, but the $1,100 l won was like winning a hundred thousand dollars. What confidence it gave me. If that confidence had been a commodity, I could never have afforded it. This game is all confidence and pride."

Friend — and Specter

Even though he was on his way, the comparisons with Nicklaus continued to dog him. Nicklaus was a friend and a model, as well as a specter.

"One day in the late '60s — I don't remember exactly what had happened on the course, maybe I had quit on myself or had threatened my caddy out frustranon— and Jack came up later and said, "Tom, let's have dinner. I have some things I want to talk to you about."

ner. I have some things I want to talk to you about."

"He told me: 'I get just as frustrated as you do at times, I get a lot of bad bounces, too. But Jeez, Tom, you've got to keep your composure and keep plugging away. The ball will start dropping for you."

If Weiskopf's temper could hinder, it could also spur. He credits the positive aspects of it to Nicklaus. "I played with Jack a lot in college, and that was a tremendous experience," be says. "Jack was the best amateur in the world at the time — and he would be the greatest player in the world at 20.

"And I could see wby. He had such intensity, such determination. You could see it in his eyes. God, he puts that stare on you. With those blue eyes. It's intimidating, The only other man I've seen with a look like

On-Course Relaxation

"And I had never seen anyone practice like Jack. Not so much the time he spent — and it was considerable — but the quality. Every ball he hit in practice was with the same thought and effort as in a tournament situa-

No one has ever accused Weiskopf of shirking practice, but his concentration was another matter. "When I was going well, I had a tendency to relax," he says. "Even in the middle of a round."

Sometimes, to the consternation of people in golf, be was unpredictable off the course, too. Once, he refused a position on the Ryder Cup team because he wanted to sheep-hunting in the mountains.

هكذا من الأصل

Even recently his agent, Jim DeLeone, sputtered when he learned that Weiskopf was not entered at Inverarry (the tournament the week before Doral) because he preferred to check out a new huoting dog at "There are other things besides the tour," Weiskopf says. "My family most of all." He bas been married to his wife, Jean, for 14 years; they have two children, Heidi, nearly 10, and Eric, 8. "The life of a golf pro is tough on a family," be says. "There's a high percentage of divorce. But I'm home as much as I can be, and my family travels with me as much as possible."

Although he maintains a relatively full schedule, playing 20 to 25 tournaments a year, there are percepuble changes in Weiskopf, man and golfer.

Physically, the hairline of his high forehead is receding; emouonally, he says he is not as mean, in a com-pensive sense, as he used to be ("Maybe I should be"). Artistically, he has adjusted his game from power to finesse: Once he averaged 285 yards off the tee; now it's 270. The compensation: "I don't lose as many balls."

He says he thinks he can play well on the tour until he is 50, even though the tour gets increasingly harder.

Wrong Color

"It rankles me when people put down the present pros, for whatever reasons," he says. "Especially when someone like Doug Sanders says they don't have any color. Imagine that.

'Sanders' idea of color was to wear a red shirt, red pants, red glove, red shoes and red bikini underwear that you could see because his pants were so tight — and he'd walk around the course with two blondes on

"The players today — like a Tom Watsoo — are more educated, more disciplined and more exciting than the older players because their games are better Weiskopf is a link between the generations of Sanders and Watson. "If you added up all the careers on the tour," says Nicklaus, "Tom's would have to be one of the best. How much better be could have been? Who knows — who's to measure success?

"I don't think you have to be the so-called No. 1 to be considered a success. Maybe fellas aren't capable of doing more. I give Tom the benefit of the doubt.

"He's putting the load on me," Weaver said cheerfully. "He said he won't start the opening game because I'll have to pitch Steve Stone," (Stone, winning 25 games and losing 7, took the Cy Young Award as best pitcher in the league last summer.) "Shirley Povich of Washington told me a story," a man said. "He said Billy Evans, the old umpire. told him. Ainsmith kept faking a steal — and nobody had ever stolen home on Bender.

"The Chief started his windup, and Ainsmith went. Bender never stopped his windup. Ainsmith was in safe and starting for the dugout when Bender pitched. The hitter flied out to center. Does the run count? "Yes," Weaver said.

Free, McGinnis, Bryant and Furlow were dealt away. Dawkins, a center of vast potential, was slowly and carefully nursed along. Team-oriented players such as Bobby Jones, Maurice Cheeks and Hollins were traded for or

Not His Type

"The 1977 team were not my type of people," he said. "I could not deal with them. They were a bunch of basically unhappy guys trying to do things for themselves rather than for the team.

"We have only one player from that team at his same position this season," said Cunningham — for-ward Julius Erving, the club's lead-ing scorer with a 24.5 average. "We have only three other guys on the roster from that team - Dawkins, Caldwell Jones and Steve Mix and noue were in the roles they are now.

Another problem Cunningham had to overcome was his closeness to his players. "I was now coaching a lot of the guys I had played with," he said.

Despite problems with personnel and personalities, the 76ers won 55 games and their division of the in Cunningham's first season. The next year they reached the playoff semifinals and last season

76ers' Cunningham Caught On Fast

"The guys have accepted him as a coach and as their leader," said Dr. J. "There are no secrets to our success. Everything is laid right out there on the table. This is still a work ethic team. "In that respect this is a team tailor-made for Billy Cunningham the ball over four seconds later. Cunningham lifted Jones and put in an additional guard, getting another player on the court who is used to shooting from long range. Such shuttling is a small thing to be sure, but it shows Cunningham's awareness.

Forget the Book

Nor is Cunningham afraid to go against the book. When guard Doug Collins reinjured his fout early this season, the logical replacement as a starter was the veteran Hollins. But Cunningham felt the 76ers were getting an extra boost from having the veteran trio of Hollins, Mix and Bobby Jones coming off the bench together, so he gave the starting nod to rookie Andrew Toney.

"Andrew was erratic and I felt he'd be better off as a starter, where the other players could act as a settling influence," Cunning-ham said. "Lionel is an experienced guard who can come in and run the show when the starters are getting a rest." Both players took Battleship Fever: Where's the Crew?

WASHINGTON — The United States is going into a ship like the New Jersey. But I always thought when I got one this tary might. We want to be in a po-sition to match the Soviets on land, on sea and in the air. There is only one problem. Once we get all the new helicopters, planes and ships built, where do we find the people to man them?

The Navy, for example, does not have enough crewmen to handle the ships they're supposed to keep on the high seas now. If we take the bat-tleships New Jer-Buchwald sey and lowa out of mothballs as Defense Secretary Weinberger wants to do this is what might happen:

"Captain, as admiral of the North Atlantic forces, f turn over the command of the battleship New Jersey to you and your fine

"They're standing over there."
"Six men for a battleship?"

"That's all the bureau of person-nel could spare, f asked for 10 but they said they needed the others to man a missile cruiser that will escort you at sea."

"Begging your pardon, sir, and meaning no disrespect, but a bat-tleship calls for a complement of

"I'm aware of that, Captain. But we're going to have to make it with what we've got. I'm sure with proper training your six-man crew can do the job. They'll just have to double up on their watches."

"You actually want me to take this battleship out of harbor with six people?"

size, the crew would go with it."

"I assure you, Captain, once you get the hang of it you'll be amazed how few people it takes to run a battleship. We've put in an automatic steering system, so you won't need anyone at the wheel, and all your meals have been prepackaged so you won't require a mess crew, and the engines have been fitted with computers so you won't need anybody in the boiler rooms. And when you press this button you can fire your guns fore and aft. So actually the only thing your crew will have to do is scrape and paint the ship when it pulls into port."

"It sounds very reassuring, Admiral. I imagine my first job will be to brief the officers."
"Officers? You're it."

"You mean I have to eat by myself?"
"Don't feel bad. Your only chief petty officer has to eat by himself

"What are my orders, sir?"
"You're to seek out the enemy and destroy him at will. But first engage in action."

"By radio?" "We couldn't spare a radioman. Here is a bag of dimes. There's a pay phone on the bridge."
"Thank you, sir. That's very generous of you."

* * * "Money isn't our problem, Cap-tain. We have more of it than we know what to do with. Our problem is that the more ships the Defense Department wants to put to sea, the more we have to stretch our manpower. After I leave here I have to recommission the aircraft carrier Oriskany with three squadrons of Grumman fighters."

"That should beef up the fleet."
"Not quite. They only gave me two pilots.

Would you like to address the

Hans Hartung

By Jeffrey Robinson

A NTIBES, France — He paints black lines

A paints black lines. Lots of black lines. Sometimes they go in the same direction. Sometimes they go in opposing directions. Sometimes they are not black, but blue or red or yellow. Sometimes they are all those colors.

It's called "lyric painting" or "action painting," because,
"What matters to me is the movement." Today, at 77, Hans

Hartung is generally considered the master of the school.

I've experimented with different styles and different techniques.

I've done some Abstract Expres-sionism and some paintings that I call scratchings, because I've scratched lines along the painted canvases. I've also worked in co-ramics and I once did a collage for Peggy Guggenheim. It's not easy for me to tell which is more important than anything else because it all comes from the same hand. But I've always seemed to return to the lyric style. I've ala child, and in school was forever drawing the music be heard. "I'd listening to the lesson. Of course the professor always caught me.

He'd come to my desk and yell, 'Hartung, are you still drawing those lines? You'll see where that guess this is my 50th anniversary.

I was painting in several styles then. There were some lyric paintings, although I could have shown them as early as 1922 had anyone bothered to give me a show, which no one did. But ways needed to paint action."

"There have been times when

'What Matters to Me Is the Movement,' Says the Master of Lines (Mostly Black)

Hartung in his studio: "The ultimate contrast."

"I don't necessarily paint all the time any more. There are some weeks, some months when I paint a great deal. Then there are lapses. There are always things to do."

He and his artist wife, Anna-Eva Bergman, live in a sprawling white house behind a large brown fence. They have "sort of" been married for 52 years -"sort of" because at one point there was a time-out that lasted 15 years. It's the kind of story soap operas are made of.

They married the first time in 1929. By the time the war came along Anna-Eva had fallen criti-cally ill. For many reasons, among them her bealth and his concern for her future if she were married to a German national, he arranged for her return to her native Scandinavia. He then fled Germany. He spent time with the Foreign Legion, which got him a French passport, and they even-tually divorced. During those 15 years, she regained her health and married someone else. He lost part of his right leg during the war and also married some-one else. In 1952 they ran into each other at a Paris museum. It was love all over again. After divorces, they remarried in 1957.

The bouse they share in the countryside west of Nice is shaped like a large block-letter C, with a beated outdoor swimming pool in the middle. There is an office with a secretary, and an assistant who seems to handle just about everything, because Hans Hartung has become big business in the last 20 years. There are, he says in French with smatterings of German and English, endless amounts of correspondence, phone calls and visits.

Down a grassy slope are his studios. Anna-Eva has her own, apart from his, although they have on occasion shown their work together. His main studio looks much like a sound stage, where instead of cameras and klieg lights there are easels and tables covered with paint cans. There is no disorder. Everything is in its place. Even the rows of rollers and brushes and brooms sometimes uses to paint with sit like surgical tools in front of a large window that forms one wall of the studio. Next to that room is another, except here there is no window for a wall. There is nothing. It is the sammer studio, where he can paint, partly sheltered from the direct sun, while thinking that be's actually m a garden.

He has assistants working for him in the studio, stretching and preparing canvases, helping him move around ("It's not always easy to work a canvas when you're crippled") and showing work to visitors. "I have always refused to let people watch me while I work. My assistants participate, they don't watch. It's only been recently that I've even been able to relax while someone has taken photos or filmed me at work. It's just not very pleasant."

The pair of Airedales have free run of the grounds, although they tend to be in the studio when he is. Canvases are stacked along the white walls, back facing out, so that there is nothing to draw his eyes away from the work in progress. And there is always music on the stereo. "Nothing much more modern than Bach."

Recently, the French govern-ment "immortalized" Hartung by using one of his lyric paint-ings on a 4-franc stamp, black lines on a shade of blue. "I like black very much because it is the pltimate contrast with lighter colors." Even now, half a century after his first show, contrast is very much one of his priorities.
"It helps bring out the things that are important to me in a painting, and that's action and

ond Memory'

In the last few years, however, he has been using black and con-trast in another form. Photography. He also does exhibitions of his photographic work. "I photo-graph everything that interests me in the world. Sometimes the results have a relation more or less with my paintings. But I'm not a photographer who paints. I'm a painter who photographs. For me, photography is like hav-ing a second memory."

There is, not surprisingly, a startling similarity between his paintings and his photos. Lots of black lines. And as soon as he starts talking about photography, as you thumb through the cata-logs of his photo exhibitions, he takes a tiny camera and starts snapping. "I love to photograph people, clouds, water, mountains, interesting lighting effects, and lines." The kinds of lines his prolines." The kinds of lines his pro-fessor 70 years ago warned would get him nowhere. Lines like those in his paintings. You wonder if someday your picture will end up in an art gallery with someone pointing at all your hard-earned wrinkles, saying, "Look, a Har-tung." But then again, one could probably du worse than to be-come a Hartung. PEOPLE: Astronomer Carl Sagan
